Every reader of this book needs the same interpretation, whose unfoldings and applications of the prophecy, as well as of the law, made Philip capable. In his first public ministry, Jesus read from these same prophecies, and said to the people: "This day is this scripture infilled in your ears." After His resurrection, when He met two of His discouraged disciples, He re-established their faith by opening up all the prophecies concerning Himself, and showing how they had been fulfilled, even in the sad events that had cast a glocun over their spirits.

It is unthinkable that between these two communications, the one public and the other personal, He had failed to instruct His apostles as to the interpretation of the Scriptures they were to teach. That period covers His entire public ministry, so that they went forth prepared by whatever knowledge He could impart for the great work before them.
